

League of Women Voters wraps up week-long effort to register...

The League of Women Voters is on a mission to get more young people to the polls visiting Bellaire High School today. registering students to vote are Grace White is here with the difference younger voters could make in November grace.

This was a first a week long voter registration HISD high schools during the first week of school. The goal to engage younger voters ahead of the midterm elections this fall. I'm just amazed. It was just so much energy with friendly faces and flyers, just engaging with them just chatting with them talking to them walking around asking them. The league of women voters went to the Halls of HFCs high schools to register students to vote and you're 17 and 10 months because they're 17 and 10 months before the election, they can go ahead and register as long as you're 18 By the time of November. Eighth for the leaks President Dr. Annie Johnson Benefield. It's a personal mission. Part of civic education is to ensure that the students have the information they need in order to make informed decision in selecting candidates but regardless of why they want to register K to 11 political expert Bob Stein says the past two presidential elections have shown us young voters could be key to watch between 2016 and 2020. There was a 19% increase in a number of men and women between the ages of 18 and 24. That registered to vote in Harris County.

If the trend continues. The league says the next challenge will be turnout. Making sure all the students signing up at schools get to the polls this fall. If we want it to continue for the midterm elections in 2022. Voters have to get out every person's voice count. The largest group of those newly registered voters are Hispanic scientists. They'll be a key group to watch this fall. Let me You
