

Local organizations launch soc... encourage voter participation

But two organizations are teaming up hosting a social media challenge. And it includes cash prizes as much as $150. It's a challenge hosted by the League of Women Voters of Mobio. And it's all about getting people out to vote. So there's a nice phrase with a story.

Do you know how many races in the last couple of years have come down to one or two votes? Way too many.

The League of Women Voters of mobile and the leadership mobile class of 2023 government project group have come up with a way to encourage more young people to vote. They've created a tic tock challenge called ib 23. It stands for increasing youth voting and it involves a competition with cash prizes.

We think that everybody that's eligible should register to vote and show up to vote. For the next six days, both organizations are hosting a challenge on Tik Tok. They're asking high school and college students mobo county to use a social media platform to upload videos that will help first time voters through the process.

They realize some of the first time voters might be a little apprehensive you know, I don't know how to do that. And oh, as scary participants can talk about one of four things why you should vote, how to register to vote, how to find information about the ballot, or what to do on Election Day. Myra Evans with the League of Women Voters explains how the competition works.

Competition will be based on the number of likes and the number of views and creativity the first place winner will earn $150 Second place will get $100 and third place will take home 50 While the challenge continues. Evans ends with this final message to young people who do not believe their vote matters.

Often you say I don't like anybody that's running. I know but I'm telling you, one of the people that's running will represent you, you are giving your power to them. So you need to go and hire the person that's best for you.

iMobile and I sprags Fox 10 News.